Tonight Cherry Deolaso Kowalczyk sure gave a great graduation party for Erin Young, our swim coach Thurs noon at the Y. Glen & I had a super time, Liz's food was excellent and the desserts at the end were out of this world. Congrats to Erin for her new Masters from CSUSM!

WORLD HERITAGE

In 2011, the Ningaloo Coast was placed on the UNESCO World Heritage List.

The listing recognises the area's global significance as a place of outstanding natural beauty and exceptional biological richness.

It is specifically recognised for its diverse and intact ecosystems, its abundant marine life, its seasonal aggregations of large marine species including whale sharks and turtles, its unique subterranean fauna and its spectacular contrast between land and sea.

World Heritage listing also reminds us of the responsibility we all share to carefully manage our own impact on this globally significant environment, to protect its vulnerable flora and fauna and to preserve it for future generations.

Another Australian World Heritage site we get to visit

HVERAGERDI, 29 MAY 2008

On 29 May 2008 two earthquakes hit South Iceland at nearly the same time. It is thought that the first shock triggered the other one.

There was no loss of human life, but quite a few people sustained minor injuries when the earthquakes came. Considerable damage occurred in the areas nearest the origin of the earthquakes, and some sheep were killed when subsiding ground collapsed on several farms. Highway 1 was damaged at Mt. Ingólfríð, and Örnin Bridge was damaged. Rock fall and landslides occurred in many places on the slopes of Mt. Ingólfríð. In some places up to 100-ton cliffs tumbled onto the flatland, and volumes of dust rose into the sky. A strip of land sank into Sagd River at the Sagd Bridge, and there were reports of rock fall in Mt. Eyj and the Westman Islands.
